

Opportunities to participate in Research

Research is an essential part in the provision of maternity and reproductive health care. Research leads to improvements in care and outcomes for babies, women, and families; both locally and around the world.

The Newcastle upon Tyne Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust has an international reputation for the quality and range of the research it develops and supports. This research can only happen because people like yourself volunteer to take part.

As the Trust supports a high volume of research right across the whole of our maternity service, it is likely that you will have the opportunity to take part in some of these research projects. You may be provided with information and approached by members of our clinical research delivery team about projects that are relevant to you.

It will always be entirely up to you whether you choose to take part in any research that you are offered. You will be given information about what the research is and what it involves, and you will be able to ask questions before deciding whether you want to take part.

Please find below a list of some of the larger research projects currently taking place in our Trust. If you would like to know more about any of these projects, then please feel free to speak to your midwife/consultant or contact the clinical research delivery team directly.
